

PRESS RELEASE 53

21 February 2016

SDMA update Product Categorisation for Wound Care and Associated Products

Every wound is different and every person is different. Everyone will react in their own way to wounds. Some wounds will heal spontaneously, whereas others will need specialist intervention before they heal.

Consequently, wound care is by its nature a complex area, requiring a significant number of product types to be available – along with professional nursing expertise to determine the best wound care products or treatments.

The SDMA Product Categorisation attempts to provide a systematic generic classification of wound care products to act as a guide for healthcare professionals.

The SDMA Product Categorisation attempts to provide a systematic and generic classification of wound care products to act as a guide for healthcare professionals. The first version was originally drawn up in 2010 following enquiries from Northern Ireland and Scotland.

A new version 8 has now been published - and a further version with an enhanced level of granularity is under preparation.

Holymoorside
21 February 2016